Career Planning

If you're stuck for job ideas and you're unsure what skills you might need, simply follow these four steps to choose a career.

Identify your skills and interests: It's important to understand your range of skills and knowledge to see if they fit the job you'd like to do. You may make a list of all your transferable and specialist skills, with examples of when you've demonstrated each. An honest assessment of your skills, values, and interests will prove useful to narrow down your options in the next step.

Explore career ideas: Compile a shortlist of around five to ten jobs, before considering the advantages and disadvantages of each in terms of career development, employment outlook, requirements, job description, salary and conditions, and training.

Make a decision: To help make a decision, ask yourself the following questions:

- Will I enjoy doing the job every day?
- Does it meet most of my preferences?
- Do I have the right skills?
- Are there any limitations I need to take into account?
- Is the job realistic in terms of salary?

Set achievable goals: Your career plan should outline how you'll get to where you want to be, what actions are needed and when, and separated into your short, medium, and long-term goals. Constantly review your progress, especially after each short-term goal is reached.
